INTRODUCTION

"Is it not time," asked the Editor of the Rutland Record in 1980, "before all is lost, to re-establish our links with the past?" These words were no mere rallying cry in the first issue of this journal. They were to serve as part of the statement of the aims of the Society that had just come into existence and as an invitation to contribute to a journal dedicated to the discovering and reinforcement of the bonds between the old and the new in the county of Rutland.

The issues of Rutland Record indexed here bear witness to the strength of the response to Bryan Waites's opening challenge. The successive numbers offered aspects of Rutland life and thought, wide in their historical range and topical variety. Matters as diverse as Rutland's origins, the history of cricket, local beer, church architecture, ironstone quarrying, and meteorology were dealt with, each in some depth, in the first five numbers alone.

Apart from Nos. 8 and 10, subsequent issues continued on the same path. Who was Who in Rutland, to which the contents of No. 8 were entirely given over, concentrated on people - not just the great and the good, but also the ordinary folk who made their mark, and a few of the great and not good. The articles in No. 10 celebrated the end of an era for Burley on the Hill and demonstrated the national and international ramifications of the story of a single property in our small but obviously not insignificant county. This account of a great house and the people living and working in it brought full circle the editor's words of hope and concern expressed in the very first issue.

The implications of the word Record have not been ignored. Each number (apart from No. 8) has provided information on documents concerning Rutland's history in the custody of neighbouring counties and in the national capital. Articles by specialists on selected manuscript sources have brought to life the events and the people recorded in the documents, showing them to be real human activities and persons, and not the meaningless motions of figures in an idyllic landscape. In every issue except No. 8 the meetings and work of local societies have received due attention. New accessions to the Rutland County Museum have been regularly reported and occasionally described in detail. Publications relating to the county and the region have been listed and reviewed, and some of the authors have contributed articles to the Record, bringing their views into even sharper focus.

These Indexes are intended to add to the usefulness of the Rutland Record by making accessible the multitude of facts contained in the first ten issues of the journal. The Compiler's warmest thanks are due to the members of the Publications Committee for their encouragement and helpful suggestions, and particularly to Tim Clough for his accurate keyboard and layout work.

CHRONOLOGY AND EXTENT OF RUTLAND RECORD 1-10

The first ten issues of Rutland Record, published under the Society's original name, are as follows:

1.	1980	pages 1-48	6.	1986	193-224
2.	1981	49-96	7.	1987	225-56
3.	1982-83	97-128	8.	1988	257-96
4.	1984	129-60	9.	1989	297-340
5.	1985	161-92	10.	1990	341-84

Rutland Record 8, subtitled Who was Who in Rutland, consists of biographical entries.
Rutland Record 10, subtitled Heritage on the Hill, is devoted to Burley on the Hill.

The merger of the Rutland Record Society with the Rutland Local History Society in 1991 led to a change of name in the publishing Society, but the title of the journal remains unaltered.
